Cultural Consideration

For those of you who are visiting Nepal for the first time, we recommend cultural information to help you integrate and feel comfortable:

The dress code is essential for men and women. Men and women should wear pants instead of shorts when traveling to Nepal. There are many hot springs, rivers, and lakes during the walk where swimming is excellent. It is usual for men to go topless while bathing, but women should not be naked. Women should try to be as modest as possible in these situations.

Hindus are concerned about the ritual contamination of food when they touch someone outside their caste or religion. Therefore, please do not touch any stew, avoid exposed food, and drink in a container used by others, touch your lips with it. Do not eat with your left hand, and be sure to give or receive food only with your right hand.

Shoes are considered degrading, so keep them on the ground and take them off before stepping on anything. If you enter a house in Nepal, follow the example of your host who decides to take off his shoes, but to enter a temple or monastery, you must remove them entirely. You will pass Buddhist walls, chortens, and stupas during the trek in Nepal and follow the local traditions; you must give them to your right. When you visit a monastery or a gumpa, it is customary to donate.
